TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

AND THE FUTURE OF THE RAILWAYS . . . 239pp . . . $4.00

What is the future of the nation's railways?

In an effort to reach a realistic appraisal of the question, some of the world's foremost authorities in industry, universities and government joined together at a conference sponsored by the Transportation Center at Northwestern University, January 23-25, 1961.

The published proceedings of the conference -- containing 16 selected papers which attempt to resolve this challenging question and point the direction for a dynamic future -- are now available from the Transportation Center.

The papers, covering technological aspects of finance, labor, government regulation, engineering, administration, economics and sociology, isolate the important factors inhibiting the full use of railway technology and give concrete proposals for overcoming these factors in the future.

SURVEY OF TRANSPORTATION EDUCATION in AMERICAN COLLEGES and UNIVERSITIES

The results of a comprehensive survey of transportation education programs in American colleges and universities has been published in book form and is now available from the Transportation Center at Northwestern University.

Over 2,000 institutions of higher education were included in the survey. The book gives approximately 220 descriptive programs which vary from an institute or school of transportation to a single course in a department.

The survey was made specifically to help vocational guidance counselors in high schools - graduate counselors in colleges and universities - and personnel and training directors in transportation and general industries decide WHAT and WHERE the best transportation educational opportunities for their specific needs were.
